

OUR AUTHORS

Elka Agoston-Nikolova is a senior research member of the Slavic Department at the University of Groningen. Her main scientific interest focuses on the representation of gender and cultural identity in oral and written literary texts, the changing perception of national identity in the post-totalitarian period in South Eastern Europe and questions of ethnic identity.

E.Agoston-Nikolova@rug.nl

*

Tiiu Jaago is Associate Professor for Estonian folklore research at the University of Tartu. Her fields of interest are problems of understanding time and history in folklore (popular narrated histories, local popular histories, family histories, etc.) and poetics of Estonian older folksong (PhD on the subject in 1991). She is editor of several books and readers on folksong studies and popular narrated history (incl. Lives, Histories and Identities, 2002; Tradition and Interpretation, 2003 in Estonian) as well as on history of folklore studies (Studies in Estonian Folkloristics and Ethnology: A Reader and Reflexive History, Tartu UP 2005, together with Kristin Kuutma).

tiiu.jaago@ut.ee

*

Ene Kõresaar is Associate Professor of Ethnology at the University of Tartu. Her main fields of research are the study of everyday life during the Socialist period, memory and oral history. She has been working on memory and life story telling since 1998 focusing on Estonian post-Soviet narrative memory of the 20th century (PhD on the subject in 2004, a book Ideologies of Life: Collective Memory and Autobiographical Meaning-making of the Past in Estonian life Stories 2005, in Estonian). She has edited books and special journal issues on post-Socialism and memory (incl. She Who Remembers, Survives: Interpreting Estonian Women's Post-Soviet Life Stories, Tartu UP 2004, co-edited with Tiina Kirss and Marju Lauristin; Memory Between Disciplines: Inter- and Transdisciplinary Perspectives in Current Memory Studies, special issue of the journal Trames, co-edited with Ester Võsu, Kristin Kuutma and Epp Lauk (forthcoming in 2008)).

ene.koresaar@ut.ee

*

Anu Korb is senior researcher at the Estonian Folklore Archives. Her PhD dissertation dealt with Estonian communities in Siberia as a source of folkloristic research (Siberi eesti kogukonnad folkloristliku uurimisallikana, 2007). Her research interests include oral folklore of Estonians in Russia, especially in Siberia, and folkloristic fieldwork theory.

korb@folklore.ee

*

Christine Garlough is an assistant professor of rhetoric in the Department of Communication Arts at the University of Wisconsin-Madison and is an affiliate of the Center for South Asia and the Folklore Program.

clgarlough@wisc.edu

*

Lena Marander-Eklund is docent and senior lecturer in folkloristics at Åbo Akademi University, Finland. Her main scholarly interests are fieldwork methodology, narration and expressions of emotion in narration. Her most recent research-project is about women's life in the 1950s.

lmarande@abo.fi

*

Håkan Berglund-Lake, PhD in ethnology, lecturer at the Mid Sweden University. His research interests concern people's everyday life from within a life-world perspective with focus on themes as place attachment, appropriation of place, relationships to the physical environment, home and materiality, coping and supply strategies. The research deals both with contemporary and historical contexts, delimited to environments where people are and have been dependent on the forest industry and forestry for their living. In his next project he will examine the increasing production of biomass in the inland of Central Sweden and its social and cultural consequences for people living there.

hakan.berglund-lake@miun.se